Subject: Interdepartmental Intelligence Production Progress

- Le The program for the production of intelligence contained in Matienal Security Council Intelligence Directive I can be considered as no more than a statement of overall policies and objectives for the Gentral Intelligence Agency and the several intelligence agencies of the Matienal Security Council departments. It defines the several types of intelligence and indicates which departments have dominant interest in certain fields of intelligence. It haves the highly important scientific, technological and economic fields of intelligence unallogated except as to the individual needs of each department. The paper done not, nor was it intended to, provide a definite intelligence production schedule. However, such a schedule is highly desirable and procedures should be perfected now to instre that all fields are properly and adequately covered and that each department receives the material outside its field of dominant interest, which it requires for intelligence purposes.
- 2. It is the opinion of the Director of Central Intelligence that a prempt and positive approach must be made to a solution of this problem and that he must advise and make recommendations in this field to the National Security Council in fulfillment of his statutory duty as set forth in Section 102(d) of the National Security Act of 1947.
- 3. It is proposed that the Central Intelligence agency propers an interagency intelligence production program, that the preparation be carried out in close cooperation with the intelligence agencies represented on the Hational Security Council, that it be submitted to the Intelligence Advisory Committee for concurrence or comment prior to issuance for implementation.

Is as first step in the development of this plan, the Director of Central Intelligence requests that each department intelligence chief subsit a comprehensive and detailed statement of the intelligence production program of his department, clearly defining (a) the intelligence requirements of his department; (b) the internal production schedule of his agency to neet these requirements; (c) the existing interagency agreements to augment (1) the internal production with external material and (2) the external requirements with internal production; and (d) the requirements not adequately or satisfactorily met by (b) and (c).

- 5. The Central Intelligence Agency will attempt to correlate these departmental programs and prepare an integrated plan, with full regard to the existing basic intelligence program, for study, comment and possible revision by the Standing Committee of the Intelligence Advisory Committee for subsequent presentation to the Intelligence Advisory Committee.
- 6. With a view toward eliminating undesirable duplication of effort in the production of intelligence, particularly in regard to publications, consideration is being given to the proposal previously made by the JIC that the Central Intelligence Agency assume the functions of the Publication Review Subcommittee.
- 7. It is requested that each recipient of this memorandum inform the Director of Central Intelligence promptly as to the date by which he will be sale to comply with h above.

Interdepartmental Intelligence Production Program

1. The program for the production of intelligence contained in National Security Council Intelligence Directive / can be considered as no more than a statement of overall policies and objectives for the Central Intelligence Agency and the several intelligence agencies of the National Security Council departments. It defines the several types of intelligence and indicates which departments have dominant interest in certain fields of intelligence. It leaves the highly important scientific, technological and economic fields of intelligence unallocated except as to the individual needs of each department. The paper does not, nor was it intended to, provide a definite intelligence production schedule. However, such a schedule is highly desirable and procedures should be perfected now to insure that all fields are properly and adequately covered and that each department receives the material outside its field of dominant interest, which it requires for intelligence purposes.

- 2. It is the opinion of the Director of Central Intelligence that a prompt and positive approach must be made to a solution of this problem and that he must advise and make recommendations in this field to the National Security Council in fulfillment of his statutory duty as set forth in Section 102(d) of the National Security Act of 1947.
- 3. It is proposed that the Central Intelligence Agency prepare an interagency intelligence production program, that the preparation be carried out in close cooperation with the intelligence agencies represented on the National Security Council, that it be submitted to the Intelligence Advisory Committee for concurrence or comment prior to issuance for implementation.

- 4. As a first step in the development of this plan, the Director of Central Intelligence requests that each department intelligence chief submit a comprehensive and detailed statement of the intelligence production program of his department, clearly defining (a) the intelligence requirements of his department; (b) the internal production schedule of his agency to meet these requirements; (c) the existing interagency agreements to augment (l) the internal production with external material and (2) the external requirements with internal production; and (d) the requirements not adequately or satisfactorily met by (b) and (c).
- 5. The Central Intelligence Agency will attempt to correlate these departmental programs and prepare an integrated plan, with full regard to the existing basic intelligence program, for study, comment and possible revision by the Standing Committee of the Intelligence Advisory Committee for subsequent presentation to the Intelligence Advisory Committee.
- 6. With a view toward eliminating undesirable duplication of effort in the production of intelligence, particularly in regard to publications, consideration is being given to the proposal previously made by the JIC that the Central Intelligence Agency assume the functions of the Publication Review Subcommittee.
- 7. It is requested that each recipient of this memorandum inform the Director of Central Intelligence promptly as to the date by which he will be able to comply with 4 above.
